THE GLASS COMBINE.

An Interesting Outline of what it May be Expected to Do.

GENERAL INDUSTRIAL NEWS

Gathered About the Workshops and Mills of this Vicinity—The Invention of a Bright Mind.

Interesting Notes.

The proposed combination of the table was made in thought by many glass men to be bearing consumption. Those who favor the project are not disturbed by general predictions of failure nor by the reasons specifically assigned for that prediction. They argue that the scheme holds out a few formal inducements that when a few formalities shall have been at least twenty-five of the thirty-odd concerns in the business. Since profit is what they are all after, and since the scheme contemplates large savings at two important points, production and distribution, the projectors of the movement think their object practically accomplished when they shall have made it clear that these savings are practical.

Each concern invests largely each year in new moulds which are almost, or quite, reproductions of the moulds of other concerns. The combination would restrict one pattern to one concern and run that on the special line to supply the trade. In the matter of marketing the product, much stress is laid on the saving of salaries of salesmen. Here it is expected not only to retrench expensures in the future, but to expand in the future by striking departure in an effort to increase the export trade while reducing the cost to each concern.

It is proposed to establish in London, Melbourne and the City of Mexico what may be termed permanent offices for the American glassware, the agency in each of these cities being placed in charge of a high grade man. The London agency would carry, say, $100,000 worth of ware in stock, that in Melbourne $75,000, that in Mexico $50,000—very large stocks of glass at present prices. It is believed that these agencies in competent hands would largely increase the output.

The suggestion is met that concerns standing apart from the combination could now making table ware would push in to profit by the new conditions. It is maintained that a bottle house, for example, is not more profitable than one in table ware than it is to produce pig iron or Royal Worcester china, and, further, that prices would not warrant the attempt. As for those table ware concerns that would refuse to go in, the combination says it is not interested in bringing them to time in case they were disposed to make trouble. As fast as one of them were to try to catch the market with a new pattern, a friendly jobber would send it to the combination headquarters. There it would be distributed, piece by piece, to the members of the combination, everything would give way to producing quickly those several pieces, and before the originator had gone far to market, the combination would have a duplicate of his set at half price. The combination would have a piece of a disturber of the peace and make money on him in the bargain.

The friendly cooperation of jobbers and of many retailers in this country, it is pointed out that in this way the interest lies. The small concerns, and some new ones of very respectable proportions, in their eagerness to make trade, go direct to the retailer or, in the case of hotel ware, direct to the consumer, shutting out the middlemen. These views are, of course, one-sided, but they show how those favorable to the scheme argue their case and why they expect success.

A Clever Invention.

Mr. John Westwood is a familiar figure on the streets in his road cart drawn by a gray horse and mounted on the two-wheeled vehicle was not agreeable to Mr. Westwood, and, being of an inventive turn, he set about seeing what he could do to take out the objectionable motion. The result is a device as simple and practical as it is ingenious. The seat is supported at the four corners by a ball socket arm. The driver's feet rest on a foot board suspended from the seat. The ball socket arm is pivoted to the seat, and the foot board and the foot board are pivoted to the seat, giving the driver a perfectly easy and comfortable seat. The application can be used to advantage on other vehicles. Mr. Westwood has made a model of a two-wheeled cart, which he has named the Baltimore & Ohio vehicle, and he has secured a patent on it. He expects to place it in one of the passenger cars for a practical trial. The experiment will be made this device now on the occasion of the car will be felt, no matter how sharp the curves or how rough the road. Mr. Westwood received his patent on Thursday last. Colonel Ben Fisher has taken out a patent on the patent and will push it in the market.

A Rapidly Growing Industry.

Flaccus Bros., the well-known catnip and fruit preserve purveyors, are just now in the midst of their busy season. The manufacture of catnip is the principal thing they are now engaged in. They are using one thousand bushels of tomatoes daily, and a few more expect to be working their forces night and day, and use twice that amount. They are employing forty hands at their city factory, and twice that number at their Mt. Belvedere plant, and are advertising for more hands. They have been putting up whole tomatoes in glass jars for the fancy trade. They make their contracts with the farmers and producers in December for tomatoes to be delivered during the following August, and they are so busy now to keep up the price hereabouts. The firm commenced the manufacture of catnip about three years ago. Then they only attempted to supply the local trade, but since then the business has proven profitable, and by care and energy has been enlarged, till now they ship their goods in car-lots from Boston to San Francisco.

The Starting of a New Industry Probable.

A movement is on foot among a number of Wheeling gentlemen, to form a company for the purpose of building a plant for the production of heavy forgings on the city and county water works. The matter will be closed in a few days and the work of putting up a new plant, or the accommodating of an old building to the company's purposes will be commenced. The company will be in the beginning depend upon a specialty for which a big demand is expected.
